The Emotional and Reasonable Causes of LA 1992 Riots based on the work *Twilight: Los Angeles 1992

“Can we get along?” – Rodney King. These words came out from the very person who was the ignition of the Los Angeles riot in 1992. The aftermath of the riots was severe mostly for the society, and this is illustrated very brilliantly both in script and by performance by the famous playwright Anna Smith Deavere in her work titled Twilight: Los Angeles, 1992. The play was performed on Broadway in 1994 and received many praises including from one New York Times reviewer, David Richards, praised her performance saying, “She does people’s souls”. The play is a collection of monologues composed by real people who were directly or indirectly involved in the riots. The characters include famous interviewees like LAPD chief Daryl Gates, congresswoman Maxine Waters, an anonymous juror of the King trial, victims including Reginald Denny and instigators. The most prominent theme throughout the play is the violence of both sides- the police and the society. The interviews portray a set of violent behavior such as police abuse on black people, and community violence on innocent victims. The interesting point in all these interviews is the point that the playwright seems to make: all the people have some kind of an excuse or and understandable reason for the pain they cause on the other side. Nevertheless, the reader and the audience asks: where is the humanity?

Smith’s play is helpful in understanding and questioning the thoughts and feelings of different perspectives behind the racial tensions and the police brutality.
